TRAVEL WELL. STAY HEALTHY.

As we travel through regions with heat and humidity, we would like to remind you to take good care of yourself and emphasize a few common sense precautions. Up to half of all travelers to tropical climates develop some degree of gastrointestinal upset. When you go ashore, things that you can do to help prevent this include: Consume only canned or commercially bottled drinks. Avoid ice cubes unless you are certain they have been made from purified water. Ensure all food is well cooked, especially meat and seafood. Only eat cooked food hot, bacteria can grow quickly as food cools. Don't eat leftovers, food from street vendors or unpasteurized dairy products. Never eat raw shellfish. Avoid cold cuts, salads, watermelon and puddings. Eat only raw fruits and vegetables that you wash and peel yourself. Wash your hands frequently, especially before eating and make liberal use of the hand sanitizers located around the ship.
